TIPS FOR SUCCESSFUL CAREGIVING

TAKE STOCK

As problems arise with your aging loved one's health and function, obtain a professional assessment of problems and needs. A geriatrician, a geriatric assessment program or a geriatric care manager are professionals who can evaluate and recommend solutions.

EDUCATE YOURSELF

Seek information about the following: the normal changes associated with aging, and changes that might indicate a more serious problem. Specific information about any disease or health condition affecting your loved one, and preventive health practices.

PLAN FOR THE FUTURE:

Learn about the range of services in your community that can help provide care in the home, as well as alternative living options. Pre-plan for financial needs (ie. trusts, financial assistance programs). Discuss "end of life" issues with your loved one, and help them execute a will, financial and health care powers of attorney, and a living will.

ENCOURAGE REASONABLE AUTONOMY:

Respect the need of your loved one to make their own decisions and remain in control of their own lives. Limits are often placed on their autonomy due to illness, disability and inadequate financial resources. However, it is usually possible for them to participate to some degree in the decision-making process.

MAKE SMALL CHANGES:

Opt for the smallest amount of change possible at each step. Help your aging loved one understand that accepting a specific service or small amount of help now will actually help preserve their overall ability to remain independent.

BE FLEXIBLE:

Your loved one's condition, and therefore their needs, will change with time. Be prepared to re-evaluate their (and your) situation on a regular basis, and to make changes in the care plan as needed. Waiting until a crisis occurs ensures that options will be more limited, and that decisions will have to be made in haste.

SHARE THE WORK:

Don't try to do everything yourself. Share the care responsibility among family, friends, professionals and paid helpers. Knowing your own limits and asking for help is not a sign of weakness, but of strength. It will ensure quality of care for your loved one.

SET LIMITS:

You have the right to say “no” to unrealistic demands or requests from anyone, including your loved one. You have the right to make caregiving decisions based upon your own needs as well as those of the person for whom you provide care. Avoid making promises you may not be able to keep, such as promising your loved one that he or she will “never” be placed in a care facility.

FOCUS ON WHAT YOU HAVE DONE WELL:

Often, caregivers focus only on what they haven’t done, or on perceived mistakes. Remind yourself of the many things you have done well. Ask yourself: “How have I made a difference for my loved one? What have I done that I feel good about?” There will be times when you wish you had done things differently. You are only human. If you make a mistake, admit it, learn from it, and then go on.

TAKE CARE OF YOURSELF:

Caring for another person is the most difficult and stressful thing one can ever do. The welfare of a dependent loved one is directly linked to the well-being of the care giver. Get adequate nutrition, sleep and health care. Seek regular opportunities for respite and relaxation away from care giving duties. This will allow you to “recharge your batteries” and will prolong your ability to provide care. Seek out a support group or counselor to help you “problem-solve” and to maintain your emotional strength.
